Call for Submissions

Water

Mosaic invites interdisciplinary submissions for a special issue on Water. We are interested in the current plight of the world's lakes, streams, rivers, and oceans, and inseparably from that, the global threat to survival of aquatic species. For example, the recent and rapid development of aquaculture has already impacted traditional fisheries and longstanding life cycles and behavioral patterns of Pacific salmon and Orca whales. Inland factory farming of animals, which has all-but displaced the traditional family farm, is now recognized as contributing significantly to freshwater and ocean pollution. From interdisciplinary critical theorists, in particular, we invite perspectives on the conceptualization of water—beyond the Western colonialist discourse of rights and privatization, a framework in which water does not fare at all well. How might literary theorists write about—and write—water, apart from relying on this oppositional framework? “Writing water,” we suggest, is a major concern for interdisciplinary theorists today.

Mosaic follows an electronic submission process. If you would like to contribute an essay for review, please visit our website for details: mosaic.umanitoba.ca/common/submit. Email any submission questions to mosasub@umanitoba.ca. Submissions must be received by: November 15, 2024.
